Nevada State Bank promotes James Rensvold and Raine Shortridge to senior vice president

LAS VEGAS – Nevada State Bank has promoted James Rensvold to senior vice president, private banking manager and Raine Shortridge to senior vice president, professional banking manager.

As manager, Rensvold leads The Private Bank by Nevada State Bank to serve the financial needs of high net worth and high-income clients, providing them with a full range of financial services for their business and family. He brings nearly 20 years of banking experience to his new role, including as a Certified Medical Banker specializing in helping healthcare professionals. A native of Las Vegas, Rensvold holds a master's in business administration from the University of Nevada, Las Vegas. He has served on Clark High School's Academy of Finance (AOF) board of directors and was nationally recognized by the National Academy Foundation for his contributions to AOF.

Shortridge leads the bank's Professional Banking Group, serving the unique financial needs of executives, medical and legal professionals. With more than 20 years of banking experience, Shortridge is a Certified Medical Banker and has been providing personalized service and product specialties to meet the needs of healthcare professionals. A native Nevadan, Shortridge holds a master's degree as well as his bachelor's degree from the University of Nevada, Reno in business administration with a focus on business management. He currently serves on the board of directors for Boys and Girls Club of Southern Nevada.

"James and Raine are invaluable members of the bank's senior leadership team," said Terry Shirey, president and CEO for Nevada State Bank. "They have a proven track record of serving the complex needs of high net-worth clientele. As experienced financial professionals, James and Raine will ensure we provide the highest level of service to our clients."
