James Su joins Nevada State Bank as vice president, corporate banking relationship manger

LAS VEGAS – Nevada State Bank has named James Su vice president and corporate banking relationship manager, where he is responsible for growing the bank’s business relationships in the gaming sector.

Su has more than 15 years of financial services experience, having previously held various positions that included management and portfolio management within retail, commercial and corporate banking. In his role as gaming relationship manager, he specializes in serving corporate and Native American casino operators throughout the United States. Su earned a Bachelor of Science degree in Hospitality Management from the Collins School of Management at Cal Polytechnic University in Pomona, California.

“We are delighted to welcome James to our corporate banking team,” said Shannon Petersen, executive vice president and corporate banking manager for Nevada State Bank. “His vast experience in management and client relations make him an asset for our clients.”
